

Guerilla War

by W.D. Ehrhart

It's practically impossible
to tell civilians
from the Vietcong.

Nobody wears uniforms.
They all talk
the same language
(and you couldn't understand them even if they didn't).

They tape grenades
inside their clothes,
and carry satchel charges
in their market baskets.

Even their women fight.
And young boys,
and girls.

It's practically impossible
to tell civilians
from the Vietcong;

after awhile,
you quit trying.

(Reproduced from Beautiful Wreckage: New & Selected Poems by W. D. Ehrhart, Northampton, MA: Adastra Press, 1999.)